Nick	So it's a big learning curve for me, while at the same time learning the different personalities of the team, while also learning the new role for me. So lots of new things, which is really, really enjoyable and something I really find that I get a lot from. And even when I think life satisfaction and role satisfaction is really high, but then this is kind of the thing that I'm feeling a bit stuck with.
Martin	I'm kind of curious. I wonder what's it like for you being a newbie again?
Nick	Yeah. Because they've been together so long before I've come in, I think that's the most challenging thing. If it was a new role, I'm like yeah, I've got this. I'm working in a different way. But for the most part therapeutically, I'm the same with my clients, irrelevant of what type of role or what name I might have kind of stuck to my role or anything like that. Working with the clients is the same. So yeah, I think it's the new dynamic with new people and being put into a new dynamic that was already established is the hard thing.
Martin	Yeah.
